Background

- Since 1991, Somalia has been divided largely along clan lines and commanded by various groupings of warlords. A quarter of Somalia's population of 7.5 million is estimated to have been uprooted. Since the beginning of the year, continuing insecurity and now drought have brought more displacement, with some 10 million people affected in Somalia, Kenya, and Ethiopia. In March, a nutritional assessment highlighted a sharp increase in malnutrition and mortality rates across the three Dadaab camps in Kenya. Similar alarming findings of widespread malnutrition were recorded among Somalis in Ethiopia. With no significant rains expected before October, the humanitarian crisis could continue to worsen into next year. Continuing insecurity and drought-related hunger have combined to make the Somalia situation what High Commissioner António Guterres now describes as "the worst humanitarian crisis in the world today."

Current situation

- On July 20, the United Nations officially declared a famine in five regions of southern Somalia. Famine is declared when acute malnutrition rates among children exceed 30 percent; more than 2 children per 10,000 die per day and people are not able to access 2,100 calories a day.
- There are currently some 800,000 Somali refugees outside their country. The bordering countries of Kenya, Yemen, Ethiopia and Djibouti host more than 90 percent of them (Kenya 438,000; Yemen 180,000; Ethiopia 159,000; Djibouti 16,500.) Nearly 1.5 million more Somalis are internally displaced, mostly in the south-central region of the country. More than 100,000 of them have been displaced inside Somalia so far this year.
- More than 80 percent of those fleeing are women and children. In refugee camps in Kenya and Ethiopia, deaths among Somali refugee children aged five or less have seen a 4.5-fold increase compared to last year.
- In Kenya, a lack of space forced a halt to the allocation of residential plots in the crowded Dadaab camps in 2008. Nevertheless, tens of thousands of Somalis continued to arrive and today, Dadaab is the world's largest camp with more than 383,000 refugees. Some 60,000 new arrivals this year have spontaneously settled on the outskirts of the camps. On July 14, the Kenyan government announced that a long-planned extension of the camp could open, helping to decongest Dadaab. Meanwhile, UNHCR is providing help to those on the outskirts of the camps, including water, latrines and health clinics, but overcrowding and related health and sanitation issues remain a concern.
- In Djibouti, a country with limited resources already struggling with more than 16,000 refugees, every new arrival adds to the strain. The Ali-Addeh camp initially designed for 7,000 refugees is overcrowded and experiencing drought. UNHCR has therefore re-opened Holl-Holl which will start receiving new arrivals.

Response

- UNHCR and the respective governments, along with its UN and NGO partners, are implementing an emergency response strategy aimed at ensuring rapid help for newly arriving refugees. Aid centres are being established in camps to offer immediate assistance to extremely vulnerable people. The slow registration of new arrivals remains one of the main challenges. In addition, provision of water, sanitation, emergency feeding, primary health care and food distribution are quickly scaling up. An emergency airlift of tents and other aid supplies is underway for both Kenya and Ethiopia. UNHCR emergency staff have also been deployed to both countries along with additional emergency equipment.
- Inside Somalia, where access remains a serious impediment, UNHCR is working with partners on the ground to distribute urgent aid. It is distributing assistance packages to some 90,000 people in Mogadishu and Belet Hawa and Doble in south-west Somalia. Further aid for an estimated 126,000 people is being handed out in other parts of the Gedo and Lower Juba regions, with assistance also on its way to Mogadishu and the Afgooye corridor, as well as further south west in Lower Shabelle. UNHCR is also strengthening its ability to track population movements in the corridors leading to the Dollo Ado and Dadaab refugee camps in Ethiopia and Kenya respectively.
- UNHCR's immediate priority is to address the critical needs of an increasingly weakened Somali population. As the situation inside Somalia continues to worsen, so too will the condition of arriving refugees. The main focus is to rapidly stabilize those arriving in extremely poor condition, particularly children suffering from malnutrition and dehydration. Upon arrival at the reception centres, the refugees receive health screening and the malnourished and those with medical complications are referred to clinics, including for supplementary and therapeutic feeding. In Ethiopia, similar alarming findings of widespread malnutrition were recorded among newly-arriving Somali refugees.
- Given this dire situation, UNHCR believes it is of life-saving importance that people in Somalia are able to get help where they are. This may, in certain circumstances, alleviate the need for Somalis to move into already stretched neighbouring countries.
- A $136 million appeal for the Somalia displacement crisis was issued by UNHCR on July 8.
