What Happened

Continuous rainfall starting on 13 May 2014 caused severe flooding and landslides in Serbia and in Bosnia and Herzegovina, affecting more than 100,000 people. Considered the region's worst floods in more than 120 years of record-keeping, the flooding has caused roads to be impassable, widespread power and water outages, and numerous bridges have been washed out. <http://bit.ly/1lyw3yO>

The flooding was caused by the extra-tropical cyclone Tamara that pulled in moisture from the Mediterranean Sea for nearly three days. Much of the water has swollen the Sava River, which cuts across the middle of the peninsula. <http://bit.ly/1KGCjx>

20 May 2014: After a week of flooding more than 80,000 hectares of agricultural land were under water, according to the Serbian Ministry of Agriculture. Over 30,000 victims have been evacuated so far flooded areas, nearly 13,600 in Obrenovac alone.

Hydrologist Sinisa Mihajlovic predicted the Danube would swell further in the coming days but that it should "remain within the flood-defence limit". <http://bit.ly/R4QhYv> Rescuers were able to contain the waters around the Nikola Tesla thermal power plant in Obrenovac which produces 50% of the country's electricity, as well as around the plant Kostolac, a hundred kilometers from Belgrade, which produces 20% of the country's electricity. <http://bit.ly/TquoVz>

19 May 2014: More than 8,000 people, a third of Obrenovac's population, had already been evacuated since Friday and Interior Minister Nebojsa Stefanovic ordered on Monday that the rest of the town join them. Helicopter footage showed most of the city's buildings submerged. <http://yhoo.it/1gHMP2n>

18 May 2014: 12 people have died, 1 person in Vavarin is reported as missing, and a total of 24,352 people have been evacuated, 2,260 facilities inundated and 1,763 facilities endangered. 324 Vulnerable people were placed in nursing homes and all are supplied with food, medicines.

The worst affected area is around the town of Obrenovac, southwest of Belgrade, where around 10,000 people are still stranded. Obrenovac is also home to the biggest power plant in Serbia, which is at risk of being flooded, potentially causing abrupton of power supply to large parts of the country. Hundreds of officials and volunteers are trying to build banks along the river Sava running through Obrenovac but reports are mixed whether these efforts are successful or not.

While water levels in some rivers are receding, the river Sava and two other rivers are still rising, forecast to reach their peak during Sunday night or later, so the danger is far from over. <http://bit.ly/1gWsssW>

17 May 2014: At least five people have died after the equivalent of four month's rainfall fell in just one day. More than 6,000 people have been displaced and 300,000 homes are without electricity. Many towns and villages are completely cut off and emergency services are working around the clock to rescue people.

Ongoing high discharges (alert level 2) on Sava, Drina, Beli Timok rivers (water levels are increasing), Kolubara, Tamnava, Jasenica, Kubršnica, Mlava, Juzna and Zapadna Morava rivers - water levels are stable.

Following a request for assistance by the Serbian government to the Union Civil Protection Mechanism, a number of European countries have offered high-capacity water pumping modules and other assistance. The delivery of assistance is

Bosnia-Herzegovina Flooding – Situation Report (May 20, 2014)

Use Right Click - to open links in a new window

What Happened

Continuous rainfall starting on 13 May 2014 caused severe flooding and landslides in Serbia and in Bosnia and Herzegovina, affecting more than 100,000 people. The flooding has caused roads to be impassable, there are widespread power and water outages and numerous bridges have been washed out. Considered the region's worst floods in more than a century, a state of emergency has been declared in Bosnia and Herzegovina. <http://bit.ly/1lyw3yO>

The flooding was caused by the extra-tropical cyclone Tamara that pulled in moisture from the Mediterranean Sea for nearly three days. Much of the water has swollen the Sava River, which cuts across the middle of the peninsula. <http://bit.ly/1KGCjx>

20 May 2014: An estimated 350,000 people were left without water or electricity in the two states. Hundreds of people have been evacuated from their homes in 14 municipalities, including those in the capital city Sarajevo. Cities like Maglaj and Doboje were almost submerged completely, and road access to some of the main cities has been blocked.

In Bosnia, at least 2,000 landslides were registered according to media sources. These landslides have also triggered a severe risk of injury or death from land mines left from the Balkan wars in the 1990s. The landslides swept away many of the carefully placed warning signs around the minefields. Bosnia has an estimate 120,000 minefields that could be exposed from the flooding. <http://www.care.org.au/latest-news>

In Bosnia more than 100,000 people were evacuated, the worst exodus in this country since the war.

"We must immediately start work on clearing to prevent epidemics, we have to manage tons and tons of animal carcasses," warned Tuesday Vucic. The Bosnian Minister of Health, Zlatibor Loncar has called for authorities to "act promptly to avoid a more serious, infectious disease from the catastrophe." A local health official in Zenica has reported "cases of enterocolitis that could be the signal of an epidemic" and urged people to consume only bottled water.

Bosnia has asked the international community to provide mobile incineration units. <http://bit.ly/TquoVz>

Volunteers are working in North-eastern Bosnia to reinforce dikes along the Sava, particularly in the area of Bijeljina, while the city Orasje was surrounded by the waters that have already flooded the surrounding villages. <http://bit.ly/TquoVz>

19 May 2014: More than 100,000 people have been evacuated and more than a quarter of the country's 3.8 million people have been affected. More than one million people have no water. Health authorities have ordered evacuees not to return to their homes until they can be cleared from the debris and safe from diseases. <http://yhoo.it/1gHMP2n>

Officials say twelve people lost their lives and more bodies could emerge as the water recedes. Heavy rains and snows in the mountains mean more flooding and landslides may occur in the central, northern, and eastern parts of the country. Areas at risk include: Maglaj, Donoj, Zenica, Bijeljina, Banja Luka Tuzla, Brčko, Modriči, Bosanskom Šamcu, Vareš, Gradačac, Mrkonjić-Grad, Zvornik, and Prijedor. Landslides, road blockages and infrastructure damages have worsened the situation and relief efforts. <http://bit.ly/RPY25o>

	18 May 2014: Almost one third of Bosnia is affected by the floods with houses, roads and railway lines being submerged in the worst affected northeastern part of the country. A state of emergency has been declared in 14 municipalities, while cities like Maglaj and Doboje were almost completely submerged and hundreds of people had to be evacuated from rooftops on Saturday. A vast number of landslides have worsened the situation and relief efforts, and there are reports that landmines buried during the conflict and not yet removed are in some instances being shifted with the landslides adding the dangers of people living in the areas as well as rescuers. http://bit.ly/1gWsssW 17 May 2014: The water is slowly declining, but the situation remains still complex due to numerous landslides, causing house collapsing and road damages. More than 6,000 people were evacuated, and it is estimated that over 50,000 people may be affected. A number of European countries have offered flood rescue modules and boats and other assistance. The delivery of assistance is coordinated by the Emergency Response Coordination Centre (ERCC) of the European Commission. http://bit.ly/1mGdHjn 16 May 2014: Municipalities of Maglaj and Doboje are completely under water, and road communication to these cities has been cut. The critical situation is also in the municipalities of Doboje South, Šekovići, Zvornik, Bratunac, Srebrenica, Kotor Varos, Petrovo, Mrkonjić Grad, Sapna, Gračanica, Gradačac, Kakanj, Olovo, Breza, Visoko, Zenica, Kladanj, Tuzla, Banovići, Lukavac. http://bit.ly/1gCnbvS

In the Brcko District, the Red Cross teams assisted with putting sand banks along the River Sava as an effort to fight with the rising water level and to prevent the flood waters entering dozens of villages. These actions are ongoing, Red Cross staff and volunteers are working around the clock to assist the affected population. The International Red Cross is providing technical support on logistics, and has mobilized approximately HKD2.9 million from its disaster response emergency fund to support RCSBiH in providing basic food and non-food items for 2,000 families. The immediate focus is on relief, however planning has already started for recovery and rehabilitation. Assessment is ongoing and further international assistance will be considered if the situation continues. The EU's Commission's Emergency Response Coordination Centre has been coordinating the provision of European assistance from 19 Member States. The United States is also providing direct assistance to the region.
