The DTM IOM Displacement Tracking Matrix (DTM) is a global initiative that tracks the displacement of populations worldwide, providing critical information to humanitarian responders and other stakeholders. This specific document captures various aspects of a settlement in Jonglei, Fangak, South Sudan, including shelter types and materials, food security, and water and sanitation (WASH) conditions. The data indicates the primary needs and challenges faced by the displaced residents, emphasizing both the immediate and long-term implications for relief efforts.

Key Findings:
- Shelters: Tukul type, primarily constructed from natural materials like poles, rope, and grass.
- Food Security: The most affected group is the host community, with primary food sources being cultivation and livestock sales. Access is limited primarily due to distance.
- WASH:
  - Water connections are present, but purification methods are minimal, relying on tablets.
  - Water sources are from natural bodies such as lakes or rivers.
  - No functioning boreholes have been identified, and no complaints about drinking water quality have been reported.
  - Sanitation facilities are basic, with open defecation being the standard practice. Garbage disposal is nonexistent, and there are no reports of solid waste problems.

The report underscores the importance of addressing basic needs such as shelter, food, and sanitation to ensure the well-being of displaced populations. It highlights the critical role of data tracking in providing a comprehensive understanding of the situation, aiding in the design of effective and targeted interventions.
