In the month of March 2016, 27,000 people made the journey across the Mediterranean to Greece bringing the total of arrivals in the first three months of the year to 151,400. In 2015, there were 856,000 sea arrivals. UNHCR initiated a data collection and analysis exercise with support from the Joint IDP Profiling Service (JIPS) in order to better inform the wider community on the profile of refugees arriving to Greece, and improve immediate response and longer term planning.

The exercise focused on Syrian, Iraqis and Afghan arrivals, and this factsheet illustrates the results of interviews with Syrian individuals during March 2016.

The profiling exercise was implemented on the islands that are receiving the majority of the arrivals to Greece: Chios, Lesvos, Samos and Leros. The survey was administered in locations on each island where all arrivals pass. The survey was not administered while individuals waited in line (e.g., for registration), or in closed facilities and children and persons with mental disabilities were interviewed in the presence of a caretaker.

A systematic purposive sampling was utilized and the enumerators interviewed respondents at regular intervals. The methodology was designed using the individual as unit of analysis. The purpose of the methodology is to provide a representative sample over the period of one month. Data by Greek authorities on age and gender breakdown of the Syrians populations arriving during the same period on the islands were used to apply weights to the data collected, to ensure a representation of each age and gender group based on the actual distribution of arrivals.

The methodology was tested and closely monitored throughout the data collection period. Four teams of Arabic speaking enumerators based in Chios, Leros, Lesvos and Samos interviewed 524 Syrians in March. The March results illustrated in this factsheet are representative of the Syrian population arriving to Greece in March.

This exercise started in January 2016 and was repeated for three months: the analysis at the end of each month give a profile of the arrivals from the main nationalities.

Operational constraints were significant: time for conducting a survey is limited, tensions may be high, some locations had to be left out due to lack of access, etc.

Many of the individuals staying overnight in hotels as well as unaccompanied children might not have been reached. The methodology attempted to factor in these challenges as much as possible. These challenges must be considered when reading the profiling results.

94% of Syrian interviewed were internally displaced in Syria before starting the journey and 94% left Syria due to the conflict and violence.

75% of those interviewed started left Syria in 2016, and for those moving directly from Syria to Greece the duration of the journey was 37 days on average.

The majority of those interviewed (80%) came directly from Syria and 80% traveled with at least a family member.

43% mentioned family reunification as one of the main reasons for choosing a destination country.

Only 17% of the interviewees said they stayed in another country (not Syria) for 6 months or more before starting their journey to Greece and most mentioned lack of adequate jobs, not meeting basic living expenses and to avoid exploitation as a main reason for leaving that country.

46% of respondents directly witnessed or experienced protection incidents during the journey.
