Humanitarian needs and issues of concern

On trapped residents:
- Circumstances are dire for those who are left behind in Marawi as the fighting enters its 24th day. Their lives remain in danger within the fighting zone, and it’s impossible for humanitarian organizations to provide them with much needed assistance due to access and security issues. Efforts to secure a humanitarian corridor should continue to ensure the safe evacuation of these civilians.

On displaced families:
- Limited food and drinking water supply, as well as access to sanitation facilities, remain as the most urgent needs of displaced families. Psychosocial support is also important for the mental health of evacuees, especially for children to cope with their situation.
- The rainy season has started, and this poses increased health risks to displaced families, especially children and elderly living in the evacuation centers. Protracted stay under such conditions makes them more vulnerable to water-borne and communicable diseases.
- The affected Marawi residents will likely face prolonged displacement due to impact of the fighting on their homes and sources of income. They will need help so they can get back on their feet.

Humanitarian situation

- The fighting between government forces and the Maute group in Marawi City, Lanao del Sur has entered its fourth week. While evacuation efforts are ongoing, an estimated 300-500 people remain trapped in the city, according to the authorities.
- More than 200,000 people have been displaced by the fighting, according to the regional authorities. The rainy season has started, and thousands are still scattered in evacuation centers, while many families have sought shelter with relatives.
- The continuing clashes, and the damage on infrastructures in the city, will likely prolong the displacement of Marawi residents. Their needs are immense and growing by the day.

On coordination of humanitarian activities:
- Some evacuation centers are underserved due to the surge in numbers of displaced people and limited personnel according to the regional authorities.
- Close coordination among all humanitarian organizations and the authorities is crucial to ensure efficient delivery of assistance.

On protection of civilians:
- We are concerned about reports of civilians who were killed or deliberately targeted, and those who are being held against their will. Civilians are not part of the fighting and should be protected.
